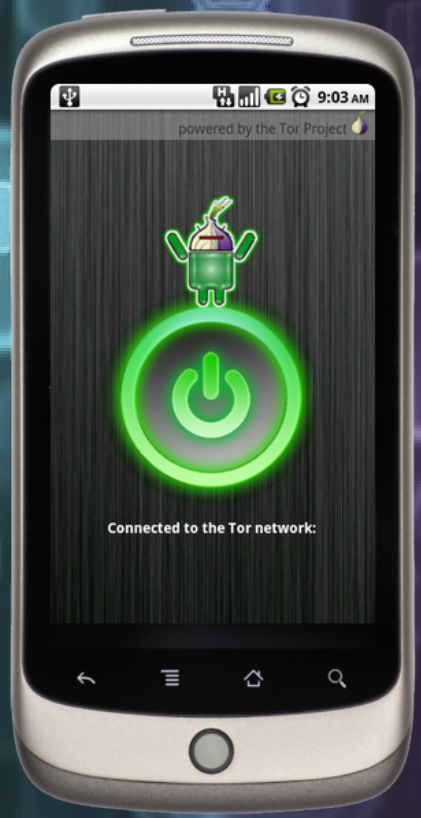
Open-Source Mobile Security Research & Development



Consumer Apps and customized hardware & software

Partnerships, Training & Advocacy

Everyday Mobile Internet Freedom

Mobile users in censorship states can use Guardian apps to get around the content filters, firewalls and monitors. Everyday citizens use the apps to watch online video, read blogs, communicate safely with friends, and otherwise access whatever content they would like, encouraging open society and culture.

Business

Business people travel all over the world, using foreign networks, bandwidth and systems. At any point, confidential information can be compromised. While some organizations implement solutions, these are often expensive, difficult to use, and not comprehensive

Activists + Citizen Journalists

Human Rights Defenders
An undercover human rights researcher traveling through a remote region without mobile data service is able to use Guardian to document local conditions using secured video, audio and photo capture. Data is stored encrypted on the device, and if necessary, it can be safely and quickly erased.

The Guardian Project aims to create easy to use mobile apps, open-source firmwares, and customized, commercial mobile phones that can be used and deployed around the world, by any person looking to protect their communications from unjust intrusion.

Whether your are an average citizen looking to affirm your rights or an activist, journalist or humanitarian organization looking to safeguard your work in this age of global communication, Guardian is the solution for your mobile security needs.
